

Independent Candidate for

King S. Woolsey.

Election November 3, 1878.

TRUE JOURNALISM.

True and faithful journalists are appreciated the world over, but the vicious, those that use the columns for the purpose of venting spite and spleen, and using the slang of the ill-bred, are condemned. The mission of a newspaper is a grand one when properly conducted, and the language and thoughts contained therein, should be penned so as to be acceptable to the masses, and no article should ever be permitted to appear in the columns of a journal that circulates in the family circle, but what could be read without the blush of shame. Unfortunately, there are many such, and if the writer could but see the effect it produces, he would not let another such appear. There are newspapers, whose columns are almost constantly filled with balderdash and trashy articles against a rival journal. It disgusts the reader, does no good and widens the breach. Far better would it be that all such would retire from the field of journalism. A true journalist should elevate and build up, state all things truthfully and manfully, criticize with fairness, condemn corruption and all else that is wrong for the public good, and at the same time, treat his subject in respectful language.

WHAT WE ARE DOING.

Of the forty bars of bullion noted by us as having been received by Wells, Fargo & Co., from Arizona, the light colored ones, containing a heavy percentage of gold, were from El Dorado Canyon, above Mohave. They were the product of the Northern California Company, which have some very rich mines in that section. The black looking bullion—the richest which comes from that Territory, was from the famous Hackberry mine. This bullion averages within a fraction of $10 a pound, and it will be followed by frequent shipments of the same rich character. It is worthy of note that, in the table of Mr. Valentine of Wells, Fargo & Co., Arizona was last year, the fifth of the treasure-yielding States and Territories. She is now crowding things to be third in the next report.—Los Angeles Herald.

In nearly all our California exchanges we find articles similar to the above. When the five or six large mills now in process of erection shall have been completed, the stream of silver and gold bullion pouring into California from this Territory will be increased twofold. That we have the richest mines on the western coast, both in placer and vein, cannot be disputed. All the mines that have as yet been developed, notably the Tiptop, Peck, McCrackin, and others, grow richer and larger as depth is attained. We will reach the third place in the rank at the next report, and keep on until it shall read Arizona, Nevada, California, etc.

The San Francisco Post is authority for the statement that the Southern Pacific Railroad, will, on or about September 1st, place 2,000 laborers at work on the Gila Valley, east of Yuma, and push their line forward 191 miles to Maricopa Wells by the end of the present year. We trust that the above information is true.

Upon the arrival of our new printing material, which will be in Phoenix about three weeks, we will enlarge the HERALD to a seven-column paper. We are thankful for the patronage bestowed and ask a further continuance.

WHAT SHALL WE DO.

(Communicated.)

As I was walking a few days ago in the suburbs of our prospective city, at a place where the future great ones are want to congregate, I saw some of our "town boys" engaged in the usual varieties of play. Some with bat and ball, others pitching "quoits" with flat river stones &c; whilst several were standing in a group engaged in animated conversation, and evidently in a quandary. "Que ha que haer?" says one of the boys.—What are we to do? "Que ha vemos"—what shall we do? says another, and I passed by, with the reflection that after all, our youths constituted the great and small interests of our country in embryo. Our country, as well as the whole civilized world is in a quandary pertaining to the civil, religious and material interests of society at large. Our greatest and best statesmen are in a quandary. They have for years been trying to unravel knotty questions. Moralists have been brooding over public and private wrongs, devising ways and means to counteract evils accumulating, and extending despite their efforts. And the philanthropists, real and feigned, are devising ways and means for the accomplishment of the greatest good to the greatest number. Yet, to-day, as our ample news mediums herald the passing events, the questions, "What shall we do?" "What can be done?" "What will come next?" are repeated over and over again by every friend of our race.

It would be presumption for a man to attempt answering these weighty questions permeating so many different avenues. Yet if reforms are necessary, (and all classes admit their necessity,) we ought to begin practising them; and instead of asking the oft repeated questions "where and when," let us all commence practising the virtues we see so much need of in others. If we are distressed over the news of bread riots abroad, let us at once proceed to relieve the needy at home. If distressed with regards to the immoral practices and lawlessness of men, let us exhibit the reality of religion, and the benefits of moral living by a better example in our own lives. If the example of our neighbor is pernicious, let us give him a better example. If there are places in our community noted for "tricks that are vain, and deeds that are vile," let us shun them. The laws of our land do not compel us to go to them, or if so, we need not countenance evil. If politics is corrupt, and some of the "great ones" are not entitled to our confidence, attend your primary meetings, and select men whom you can trust. In a word let us all assist in clearing the source, and the stream will, from the great bosom of society, roll down pure waters refreshing, healthful, and purifying to future ages.

We all hope in this way to see the chasm in politics securely bridged. Till then, ADIOS.

A stranger leaving California for the Territory of Arizona is besought on every hand with misrepresentation in regard to our resources, and the picture is drawn of a dreary country, the home of the blood-thirsty Apache, the lizard and cactus, but when he reaches here that prejudice is removed. It is true we have some considerable wastes, but the beautiful valley of Salt River and the numerous other agricultural sections dispell all such gloomy pictures. These misrepresentation are an injury to us, and does not in the least benefit those that make them.

It will be remembered that on the 27th inst., the Democratic Primaries takes place, to elect delegates to the County Convention. The Convention will consist of 33 delegates, and it behooves our citizens to select none but good men. Strict partizanship ought not to enter in a contest for county officers.

Governor Fremont.

Philadelphia Press.

There are few of any political faith, who will not approve the appointment of General John C. Fremont to the Territorial Governorship of Arizona. His life has been unexampled in its great possibilities and its conspicuous failures. From an obscure army officer, with ill-directed love of adventure, he burst upon the country as a Presidential candidate, and lost the race by a nominal and always disputed majority in Philadelphia, in October, 1850, and from the first leader of the great party that has since administered the government for two decades, and accomplished the grandest results of history, he has long been forgotten in politics and entirely unfelt in the affairs of state. Once regarded as one of the first millionaires of the country, he is now broken in fortune and owns no part of this world's surface but a grave. When war came he was hurried home from Paris to accept one of the most important commands in the Union army, and in a few months he was degraded by those who had been his friends and his military career stamped with failure. He conceived the construction of a grand trans-continental railway on the southern line, commanded the the favor of Congress and the confidence of Paris bankers, only to be swamped in irretrievable bankruptcy denounced as a swindler and convicted of fraud in the criminal Courts of France. With all his prominence in the political movements of the country, his only experience in civil trusts was a few days' service as one of the first United States Senators from California. He has been jeered by political enemies as the statesman who never made a speech; the General who never fought a battle and the millionaire who never had a dollar; but with all his failures, he has deserved well of the nation, for he has generously sowed where others have reaped, and in all the evils imputed to him he has been greatly more sinned against than sinning. His accomplished wife, has bravely struggled with him in all the sad mutations of fortune through which they have passed, and the education of her son has been accomplished by the fruits of her pen. They will well grace the humble Gubernatorial mansion of Arizona, and President Hayes will be thanked for the appointment by very many who have grateful memories of 1850.

The Miner of a late date says: "Col. King S. Woolsey, who is fairly, squarely and independently before the people for their suffrage on the 5th of November next, and who will stand by Yavapai and Mohave equally with his own county, Maricopa, and not lose sight of the interests of Pima, Pinal and Yuma, has gone on a business trip to the famous fields of Globe. Mr. Woolsey is gaining in popular opinion, daily all over the Territory, and his election is a foregone conclusion."
